Students enrolled at the University of Hawai'i who student teach in the public schools of Hawai'i receive legal protection under provisions of the Hawai'i Revised Statutes and Department of Education Policies and Regulations (e.g., liability insurance, workman's compensation).

If a student teacher reports to the school before the beginning of the University semester or continues beyond the end of the University semester, he or she may not be covered. However, students may report to student teaching before or after the formal university semester, provided the school principal signs this form indicating that the student teacher is serving as a volunteer during the time the University is not in session. Students should give this form to the UHM Cohort Coordinator for record keeping.
