

Nobuko Miyairi

ORCID

Connecting Research and Researchers

Once upon a time, back in 2000, Nobuko Miyairi entered the Library & Information Science Program with the hope of becoming a librarian. She learned many things about librarianship; however, what Nobuko learned most was about herself. She discovered that her real passion was making people happy.

Come hear her exciting story... from the joys of children's books in a cake shop to working as a vendor dealing with information professionals across Asia and the world.

Going Beyond Libraries with Your LIS Degree:

Stories of one LIS alumna, Nobuko Miyairi

Nobuko is Regional Director, Asia Pacific for ORCID (<http://orcid.org>), based in Tokyo, Japan. She joined ORCID as full-time in July 2015 after serving as their Outreach Steering Group member for over two years. Nobuko builds relationships with stakeholders across Asia Pacific, including research institutions, publishers and funding bodies, to expand ORCID adoption and awareness in the research community and contribute to the advancement of scholarly communication and information management.

Prior to joining ORCID, Nobuko held positions at Scholarly & Scientific Research business of Thomson Reuters, and most recently at Nature Publishing Group as Consultant/Analyst, Asia Pacific, providing solutions for research management and promotions. As a librarian by training, Nobuko brings an extensive working knowledge in needs-based consultancy and information management. She earned an MLIS from the University of Hawaii at Manoa.
