KAHO'OLAWE ALOHA 'ĀINA MOVEMENT ORAL HISTORY PROJECT

The Kaho'olawe Aloha 'Āina Movement Oral History Project aims to collect and document the unique experiences of kūpuna and mākuā (elders and adults) who, from 1976 - 1994, were instrumental in stopping the bombing and military use of Kaho'olawe. These stories will intimately inform and further preserve understandings of a pivotal moment in Native Hawaiian political, cultural, and spiritual history. Initial support for this project is provided from the Hawai'inuiākea School of Hawaiian Knowledge through the Native Hawaiian Education Program No'eau Grant, a federal grant of the U.S. Department of Education.

From Mā'ili, O'ahu, Kamuela Werner is a first-year graduate student in the Applied Cultural Anthropology Program and Museum Studies Graduate Certificate Program. As a Graduate Research Assistant in the Department of Ethnic Studies' Center for Oral History (COH), he assists COH Director, Dr. Davianna McGregor on the Kaho'olawe Aloha 'Āina' Movement Oral History Project.
