Classified Research

University researchers do not engage in classified research on campus except when faculty members are asked to apply unique skills or University resources to solve problems seriously affecting national welfare or security.

The University will accept a contract with a security classification if only intended to permit faculty members access to classified information off-campus. This exception is sometimes necessary to allow faculty to keep abreast of developments in their research areas.

Date last revised Feb 2002