On 13 April 1964, civil rights leader Malcolm X left New York City to begin the Hajj, the pilgrimage to Mecca required of all able-bodied Muslims. As Malcolm X would later note in several speeches and in his autobiography, the Hajj would represent a watershed moment in his life—an experience that would move him spiritually but which would also profoundly transform his understanding and views of racial politics in the United States and around the world.

Join us for a lecture by Abdul-Karim Khan, Professor of History at Leeward Community College, for a discussion of the Hajj and its impact on Malcolm X.
