Faculty Roundtable

featuring Lothar Von Falkenhausen (Archaeology & Art History, UCLA) in conversation with Christopher Bae, Christian Peterson (moderator), Barry Rolett and Miriam Stark (all of the UHM Dept. of Anthropology) co-sponsored with the UH Department of Anthropology and Center for Southeast-Asian Studies

Understanding China (Event 1): “What Can Chinese Archaeology Contribute to the World?”

Prof. Falkenhausen previously spoke on this topic at UCLA (see https://youtu.be/mouox_LX5L4). Here, he will discuss significant new developments in Chinese archaeology with colleagues from the University of Hawai'i at Mānoa.

Lothar von Falkenhausen was educated at Bonn University, Peking University, Kyoto University, and Harvard University, and received his PhD in anthropology from Harvard in 1988. His research concerns the archaeology of the Chinese Bronze Age, focusing on large interdisciplinary and historical issues on which archaeological materials can provide significant new information. He has published copiously on musical instruments, including a book, Suspended Music: Chime Bells in the Culture of Bronze Age China (1993); Chinese bronzes and their inscriptions; Chinese ritual; regional cultures; trans-Asiatic contacts; the history of archaeology in East Asia; and method and theory in East Asian archaeology. His Chinese Society in the Age of Confucius (1000-250 BC): The Archaeological Evidence (2006) received the Society for American Archaeology Book Award.
